Verbal Description

This worked stone is, I believe, a kind of volcanic tuff, with lots of inclusions, making it look almost like a conglomerate. It is rougher and coarser in texture than the tuff commonly used for building, and although 4 of its 6 sides are finished ~~and~~ relatively flat, these sides are more like fine sandpaper than anything else. The 2 broken sides/edges are quite rough, and one of the finished edges is rougher than the rest. Although there are no clear signs of use, we speculate that this was some sort of smoother or abrader.

roughly finished
